We take for granted that our universe as we know it, formed from a black hole and is ever-expanding. But what if the black hole at the heart of our origin begins to contract, to draw back within itself instead of expand? How long would it take for mankind to even identify it was happening, let alone see the consequences of a cosmic reversal? That's the question Time Window asks and fictionally answers when humans notice an unusual series of genetic occurrences. Collectively, the genetic changes the scientists identify threaten man's reproductive capability. The discovery kicks off an international race against time to unravel the mystery, reverse events and save our species from extinction. Can the world scientific community unite to understand the threat? If understood, does man have the capacity to unravel the puzzle and reverse the dangerous genetic trend? Your fate, mine and the fate of mankind depends on the success of the scientific community. The time window is short. Is it too short? Is the end of the planet inevitable?
