Leaving Time and Tennessee Lorraine Andrews Taylor

Daydreaming is a pleasant diversion for Makenna until Grandmother butts into family business one too many times, and the daydreams become eerily prophetic.

When adversity comes, she blames herself and flees to the companionship of her precious Pa and horses. Weighed down by old wounds, she is ripe for cosmic picking, flung into other times. Gabriel, an English long hunter, helps her survive in the unsettled woodland, getting caught as well in the strange turn of events. Adding to the confusion, she wants to change history while he presses on for his land claim. Then, the persuasive Joseph shows up reminding her of someone who caused those old wounds and is now creating new ones.

How can she accomplish anything with the ugliness of her dreams now affecting these two men? Will leaving her beloved Tennessee for New York City save them and heal resentments? Will she ever see her Pa again?
