Excerpt from Every Man His Own House Painter Paper Hanger

Thousands of persons in the country, and also in our towns, have long felt the want of a work such as is now presented to the public by the author, who has had upwards of twenty years practical experience in the painting business. Such plain instructions as are here given, will enable any one to mix paints as well as an experienced painter, and the use of a brush can be acquired by a little practice, so that a person can turn off a pretty good job who has never painted before.

The object of this work is to enable the Farmer to paint his wagons and his plows, his mowers, his cultivators, his house, or anything he may wish to paint, and also to enable the Mechanic and the Merchant to paint (their own houses, or chairs, or furniture of any kind, at their leisure hours, and the price of the work will be saved on the first wagon or piece of furniture painted by them; and I contend that this book, circulated amongst our agricultural population, and in villages and towns, amongst the mechanics and merchants, &c., will be the means of saving thousands of dollars to the country by the increased protection from the weather, that their houses and agricultural implements will receive by a little paint applied at the right time.
