Light Fractal Painting: A Dynamic New Approach to Painting Larry Coffin

These paintings are called light fractal because they are created entirely with pixels of light. And fractal because the method of creation is with a new and experimental set of “brushes” that each have a unique set of fractal algorithms. What further sets them apart is in the act of applying the color/light, the brush acts dynamically, has a unique movement. And as that movement unfolds you react and interact with the brush. It is a completely unique way of painting. There is a leading and a following simultaneously. And like any digital graphic software, a seemingly endless number of variations are available to create brushes.
